

Volume 1 January 2018, Issue 2

Edgar Wil.

Philosophy Now Press

Volume 1 January 2018, Issue 2

Introduction

From now on, this channel will become world issue blog. Please stay tune for more articles. And be sure to add this website to your bookmark, if you are interested in the following topics.

- World Issues
- Moral and Humanities
- General Philosophy
- Existentialism
- Aestheticism
- Determinism
- Chaos theory
- Digital physics
- Fatalism
- Free Will
- Voluntarism

A very short article within the trending and contemporary topics in Philosophy discipline. Updated bi-weekly, the article you could finish reading in a coffee break is the aim of this paper.

Miserable? Horrible?

Recently, I've come across with different topics like ethics and choices. Citing Woody Allen's famous quote, "you are lucky that you are miserable." the preface of this is "the life became horrible for some of the people, all the others are miserable." What he meant was we should be grateful if we are living a miserable life. Overlooking the situation in Hong Kong, we can imagine being living rich is not quite miserable, well, maybe they might get caught in few lawsuits when their rich parents die. Other than that, I am pretty sure they are living a good life - driving a supercar, not really have to worry about their credit card statements, get healthy because they are the people who escape from daily working routine. All they need to worry is aging really. I have always wanted to truly believe in this quote. It seems to act like a self-comforting quote. But it did not work for long. To be an adult, a responsible one, we have no choice but to work in order to feed yourself and the family. On the other hand, Woody Allen is the person who indeed could work and be happy all the time, he is super paranoid and he loves working and writing and living in an imaginary world. He stated not only once that he will never be retired, the reason behind this is that he thinks once his job ends he is just immediately next to death, a single step ahead.

Thoughts

I've been recently being skeptical about life choice, do we have free will to choose, or giving you to go back in time with the identical setup, each time you will come up with the exact same choice and regrets that you did. Life becomes horrible once you realize that you have no full control of life. the building you are in right now could be collapsing, the train you are riding on could be crashing, the wolf behind you on a hundred yards of green glasses far away from the city could have found his next meal. The powerlessness of life making people like me and many sad and frustrated.

More to read

If you are interested, you might also read Bial (2005).

References

Bial, H. (2005). Acting jewish: negotiating ethnicity on the american stage & screen.
University of Michigan Press.